Sir,—In answer to your inquiries of the 11th ult. upon the practicability and success of the cultivation of Sugar and Tobacco is Forida, I have the pleasure, in relation to the first, to enclose you a letter on the subject, enclosed to me by J. C. Clelland, Esq. a gontleman of noted experience and veracity, which I am well aware far surpasses any thing I could write on the subject, although all the facts stated in his communication are known to myself and many others.

there, but at Mr. Lucas's Repository, whither the innkeeper, after vainly endeavoring to direct his fordship to the place, offered to accompany him. To the Repusitory they repaired, where a horse belonging to the gentleman in question was shown to his lordship, who expressed himself pleased with its appearance: saying, that it would just suit his weight, and that he should buy it of his friend. His lordship showed, whilst at the Repository, his knowledge of cattle; and the innkeeper never dreamt that he was acting the Cicerone to my Lord Clonbrook, though he did, tree believe, think him a queer looking fellow for a peer. When quitting the Repository, a carriage in the yard attracted his lordship's attention; and, on being told that it had been seized for debt, he exclaimed against the pusillanimity of persons submitting to have their have the pleasure, in relation to the first, to enclose you a letter on the subject, seclosed to me by J. "In relation to the Spanish Tobacco, I am perfactly satisfied from experience, that it will succeed well in any part of this Territory where the land will produce a crop of any kind. The climate and soil seems peculiarly adapted to it. On one plantation, last year, was raised about 800 pounds, and that on less than an acre and a half of poor caw pond pine barren land, a about 12 miles from town. The planter got but one full cutting, and sot mere than half a crop at second, and no third crop. A widow fady in this city, made 700 pounds of first rate Tobacce off of less than half an acre, and that with only the casistance of a boy about 14 years of age.

"I could state further, that a gestleman of this city also made, from little more than an average, require one light hand to the acre, and if the soil he good, from 16 to 1500 lbs. may in the soil has good, from 16 to 1500 lbs. may if the soil he good, from 16 to 1500 lbs. TRIUMPHAL ENTRY OF MR. UCONNELL INTO DUBLIN.

Yesterday having been fixed upon as the day on which Mr. O'Connell was to return from England, a number of gentlemen proceeded at an early hour to Kingatowa, where a steamboat was in readiness to convey them to: Howth, where Mr. O'Connell was to have arrived by the Holyhead packet. In a little time the steamer entered Howth harbor, and the Committee went ashore. It would be difficult to describe the meeting of the immortal patriet and his friends. Greetings of the most ardent kind marked the joyous occasion. Mr. O'Connell wore a blue frock, with the Association buttons, blue trowsers, and a blue travelling cap with a gold band, surmounted with a bit of green ribbon. He looked remarkably well after all his toils for the liberation of his country. The party having formed a line of procession, along the quay, got en heard the steamer about 11 o'clock, the band playing "Home, Sweet Home."

When the party gained "the midway," the mist which hung over Kingstown during the native his his hours as the forty-Foot-road, and thence on to the Anglessea Arms, was crowded with men and women—the young and the eld—and all rivalling each other in enthusiastic scelamations. When the Kingstown entered the Royal Harbor, two more rockets were fired, and the band struck up "See the conquering hero comes."—The moment was truly happy—a loud shout of welcome issued from the shore, and was responded to by plaudits, which, if not see loud, were certainly not less raptureus. In a few minutes the entire party were safely landed upon the spot whore his Majesty took his departure from Ireland in 1821. The shouts of appliance at that moment were really astounding, and it was not till after frequent remonstrances that allence was in some measure restored. parties from treated in the second of a plause at that moment were really actounding, and it was not till after frequent remonstrances that allence was in some measure restricted. When order was partially established, Mr. Nugent and other gentlemen, who are residents at Kingstown and old Dunleary approached to the second plausing plausing the second plausing pla guage in stronger words. Immediately the Journal du Commerce and Journal de Paris copied the article.

At the next opening of the chamber a crowd gathered round the miniscers, particularly M. de Martignac, and demanded whether such words had been used; and how language had been put into the King's mouth which represented the chember as venal. M. de Martignac pleaded ignorance, and declared that he did not believe his Majesty had used the language imputed to him. M. Pas de Beaulieu, however, declared that, with the exception of some expressions, he had heard the King use the language complained of. He told his colleague, Mr. Chateaufort, who was present when the King made use of the expressions published, which Chateaufort, now wished to contradict, that he, Pas de Beaulieu, would render homage to truth if a denial were published. The agitation of the chamber was extreme.

The Presidem declared that he was so far off from the King that he heard nothing—some members were for prosecuting the journals as having outraged the King and the Chamber, but this appeared somewhar dangerous. It was thought that an inquiry might reveal a troublesome secret, and it was soposed the affair would be permitted to rest. But the public generally thought that some of the members touched the government purre for 10th of rance a month each. The writer of the letter thinks there is no chance of M. de Chateaubriand's being in the Ministry, as he has said that be will not go with the Royalists, that nothing stable can result from any other rule but that of the left side.—The writer is of opinion that the King will not consent to any such government. He remarks that as diplemacy is the art of decaving, it may be that Chateaubriand affects to object to power, that he may more advantageously intrigue for it. Mr. Bordeau acted in the same manner on the evening of his nomination, and the next day and to the career of Don M

"Hitherto the Journals had felt the necessity of not implicating in their controversies an august name and person. One of them has thought fit to free itself from this constraint.—It has been reported, and others have copied from it, a conversation which it pretends took place between the king and the members of the bureau of the Chamber of Deputies, whence it attempts to draw inferences contrary to the independence of the Chamber. Some persons have seemed surprised that no explanation has been given by the government of so serious an affair. These persons have not reflected, that to max the name of the King with such explanational would be only adding an impropriety to that which has already been committed. We know that the very day after the appearance of the article in question, the bureau of the Chamber contradicted formally, by a declaration sign-Hitherto the Journals had felt the necessity the critics in question, the bureau of the Cham-er contradicted formally, by a declaration sign-d by each of its members, the completely dis-orted statement, to support which its testimony cemed to be appealed to; but we readily con-sive that the government, while doing justice to the sentiment which dictated this declaration, has thought it useless, and contrary to the dignity of the throne to make it public."

For my part, I can form an idea of nothing so pleasant, as an English farmer, with two or three thousand pounds in his pecket, going and settling at once in Long Island or near it. Oh! how hap ye to must feel when he looks back at what he has left behind him! How he must pity the his name was in the Monitour. The writer states that England is afraid of an open rupture with Russia, and therefore when it was thought she would declare herself she had suddenly receded, and continued her preparations in secret. He thinks England has determined to put an "notax gatherers will come to take that away." What a change to see no beggar, to hear of no pauper; never to hear the sound of the words, "want of employment:" and to look upon a man as mad, who raves about "surplus population!" What a change to behold the poorest of rers eat meat three times a day, and to see a whole people who do not deem it a trespass, if the stranger gather their fruit, or even if he come and sit down in their houses! What a change to behold these things, and never to see or hear of an insolent cock parson, strutting about and devouring the fruits of men's labour! Who can refrain from praying for the prosperity of such a country! Who can refrain from wishing success to its government? For my part. I see, with delight, every thing tending to increase the power of that happy country, te which I, in all probability, owe that I was not killed in some dungeon in 1817, and to which all us Englishmen (except the Boroughmongers and other taxeaters) owe that we are not the most degraded of all human beings. If the emigrant be desirous of growing rich, or, of what is called adding to his capital, I recommend him to go to some English colony, or, which would be shorter work, to the devil at once. For, in America he can only live well, keep generous hospitality, take his pleasure, enjoy a good deal of leisure, and possess his farm unincumbered. This is all he can do in America; for if he attempt to rake money together, he will fail; and especially if he attempt to get money out of the labour of other people, he must work some himself; his children must work for him as they grow up; they will save money out of their labour; and, if all be well managed, there will be the means of giving to each child successively a fair start in the world.

If there be any man who is worthy of my good the stranger gather their fruit, or even if he co and sit down in their houses! What a chan masters must have been glad to get rid of such trash. A man who values his dog takes more care of him. Numbers, we believe, of those that infest our streets, belong to the tenants of hovels about the outskirts of the town, kept for the amusement of their owners at the expense of elderly gentlemen in their morning and evening walks. These are never fed at home, but are sent into the city to pick up a bone wherever they can; and, when bones are scarce, the plump calf of the first well-fed citizen that falls withinreach of their hungry jaws offers a temptation too strong to be resisted by a starving cur. A man who loses a fine pointer has good reason to grumble. But if a score of those persons who sometimes, for the pullic good, devote a share of their attention to matters apparently trivial, would keep, during a few months, a list of those whom they know to have been bitten, its publication. we are sure, would convince every one that the dog law is a good law, and ought to be journal, often enables even the dunce to out-strip the man of genius, and makes fortune the friend of stunidity. His maxim is not very but he illustrates it by an anecdote which is so to us. We have sometimes heard with wender of the exploits of thoroughgoing selesmen; but never of any quite equal to this and to say, the west of Scotland, who had engaged in the then recently introduced into that part of the country, found it necessary, or conjectured it might be profitable, to establish a permanent connexion with some respectable mercantile house in London. With this design he packed up a quantity of goods, equipped himself for his journey, and departed. He travelled on foot to the metropolis. Upon his arrival he made diligent inquiry as to those who were likely to prove his best customers; and accordingly, pro-ceeded to call upon one of the most opulent drapers, with whom he resolved to establish a regular correspondence. When Saunders entered the draper's shop, he found it crowded with purchasers, and the clerks all bustling busily at the back of the counter, handing out their several wares to their respective customers. Saunders waited what he thought a reasonable length of time, then laid down his pack, his bonnet and staff upon the counter, and inquired in his broad Scotch for " the head o' the house." One of the clerks asked what he wanted. The answer was, as usual, a question. "What ye ought i' my line, sir?" "No," was the prompt reply of the person interrogated, who accompanied his mo-nosyllabic negation with a look of contempt for the mean appearance of the itinerant Scotch merchant. "Will you no take a look o' the gudes, sir!" was Saunders's next query. The EDINERRH LITTERARY JOURNAL COntains a chronological list of the writings of Sir Watter Scott, which many of the admirers of that delight of the age will thank us for copying. In observing the date of the Lay of the Last Minsteel, we cannot but recal with pleasure the recollection of having been present, in early boythood, in a small company, when one of the first copies received in this country was triping through the distant relative of the poet; one who, at though settled for some years in this country when an encourage himself by thinking he ball have nothing to do with the clork, completely out of temper, as he pushed that trelative of the poet; one who, at though settled for some years in this country was and his ears, but he must keep his good of the poet; one who, at though settled for some years in this country was triping try, remembered him well under the familiar cognomen of Limping Wattie. A PHILOSOPHICAL BIOCANER.

Paris, May 25.—A work, called "The Memories of a Philosophical Buccaner," has ally made its appearance in the capital, and its chief feature of novelty arises from the singular this proper team of the capital propers in the transparance in the capital, and its chief feature of novelty arises from the singular this propers than bever before noticed on the ambient to arready a production. According it has observations (which in this particular assent to arready) the promotion of the same and the stready in the feature of the capital and the latter which governs the stage and the literary works, filled with details of reimanity, have met with a most favorable reception awas in fashionable circles. The question is, how can the public lasts be brought back to a proper standard, after suffering from the effect of such works; and would it he peasible to please a randers of the "Memoirs of Vidooq" with the productions of sanshib writers and classical compositions. The suffering form, and shound the repatition of such repasts. The "Memoirs of S Philosophical Buccaneer" may, in this respect, be considered an antidots against the deprawed tasts of the day, and they may be called then the plant suffer of the horrife, as nothing form, and shound the repatition of such repasts. The "Memoirs of S Philosophical Buccaneer" may, in this respect, be considered an antidots against the suffering the price of the corride, as nothing form, and the captal suffering the productions which the author the repatition of such repasts. The "Memoirs of S Philosophical Publication with the suffering and the suffering and painful such as a suffering the suffering and painful such as a suffering the suffering and painful excitement which its descriptions there will be found a number of aircraft honorable for the crimes of which he had been guilty. The publisher considently hoppes that this work will be th who were anxiously awaiting the hour for distri-bution of their food, and who, the instant their bution of their food, and who, the instant their seasty pittance was dealt out, devoured it with avidity, and longed after the next distribution.—Sometimes the Doctor, through caprice, would put the patients on water-gruel diet, and (do I live to state it? but it is true.) I have seen an unfortunate creature eat a cataplasm; nay, I have witnessed still worse.—I have seen human beings expire from hunger."

This state of suffiring has been so great, that the unfortunate creatures became so familiar with death that they would often smile in calculating the period they had to survive; and the following will be found a most singular instance of this state of feeling.

"An old man named Ladure was informing an old companion who slept in the same bed, of "An old man named Ladure was informing an old companion who slept in the same bed, of a plan which he intended to adopt on being released from prison; when the other, in a loud voice, exclaimed, 'You old rascal! how can you say so; you know that you can't live many hours.' What is that you cay?' replied Ladure. 'You are mistaken if you think I am going to die; and I hope you'll go before noe.' What will you bet but you'll die first' said the other. 'You have nothing to bet with,' replied Ladure,—'you hav'nt got a farthing.' 'No matter,' said the old man, 'I'll bet my next allowance of wine.' 'Ah!' observed his old companion, 'then you wish I should inherit your last portion.' 'Bet, bet, old Guillot,' cried out a dying man. 'With all my heart,' answered Guillot, 'for I'm sure I shall drink the old follow's wine.'

"Two days after this wager, the two old men were nearly reduced to the last stage of life. Shortly after the morning distribution of food, wine, &c., Ladure attempted to leave his bed, but his eyes seemed fixed, and he became so weak that one of his companions was obliged to take him back. Guillot, then said to him, 'Now, you old rascal, you are going to die. I am glad you have not drank your wine; 'Ah! Guillot, I have lost, drink my wine;' and wish these words he expired. 'I was right in saying I would have your wine;' observed in saying I would have your wine;' observed

HAT MANUFACTURER.

No. 55 South Third st. opposite Girard's Bank

ESPECTFULLY amounces to this irrents, and the public in general, that he has now on hand, and is constantly receiving from the Factory gentlemen's superior BEANER & IMITATION BEAYER HATS, of the intest Fashions.

Piano Forte Manufactory. Ware Room, anticipating, as usual, at the opening, son, an inflag of demand for the article in which he is happy to say his success in the proximity to periection has exceeded his most anguine expectation.

The ready sale of these improved Pinno Fortes is, and has been, a most estisfactory test of this fact, and it is a matter of an small moment to offer ugain his unfergoed thanks, for the almost emparalisted encourage meant with which he has been met, by his friends of the Country as well as the Cay.

In thus tendering his grateful regards to his fellow citizens and patrons generally, he avails himself of the opportunity of offering an entire new sacctment of the heat productions from his Manufactory, which certainly will need no verbal recommendation from himself, or survey of the control of the production from his Manufactory, which certainly will need no verbal recommendation from himself, or survey of the control of t sured as he is that his instruments van per firmly for themselves.

The expenses of this establishment being perhaps less than any other in the city, he lead encouraged to say that country merchants who may be venders or have orders, will further their interest in the two fold view of judicious and pecusiary advantage in giving him a call.

Piano Fortes repaired neatly and promptly. Old ones taken in part pay fir new. E. N. SCHERR, N. W. corner of Market and Eighth streets.
